GETS MEDAL IN HOSPITAL

teceives British Decoration.

Special Despatch to Tam Sum.

Mindletown, N. Y., Sept. 18.—Corporal Joseph Steepkal, who fought in northern Russia last winter and on Decomber 30, curing the taking of Kadish, distinguished himself, has just been decorated with a hero medal at General Hospital No. 8. Otisville, where he is a patient, the honor having been conferred by the British Government. The distinction says he repeatedly stood up in an exposed position and fired a Lewis automatic rifle while being subjected to a heavy machine gun and rifle fire.

"His brave conduct was an example to the brave men serving with him and largely contributed to the driving of the samy out of Kadish and the taking of the town by our troops," says Majorof the town by our troops," says Major-Gen. Ironsides, commanding the North-ern Russia expeditionary forces. Corporal Steepkal's home is in De-

As I returned from fishing in the Georgie M. of Wreck Lead at the Cholera and Angler banks on Tuesday (where the anglers averaged from five to ten sea bass and fluke), we met a dory with a dragnet nearly 150 yards long. In the host the men had five weakfish, 100 large snappers, 50 little lafayettes and a few dosen of the smallest flounders I have ever seen.

At the fish store at the station they disposed of their catch with the remark "We had peer luck to-day," Isn't this net fishing illegal? How can we expect to have weakfishing in the bays with such netting? Also how about flounders now that the season is almost here?

The Disappearing Fly Red.

Hers is a description of the fly rod of 1850, which, taken in connection with the two ounce rod of the present day, bears out the contention that the fly rod is rapidly disappearing.

"A trout fly rod should not be more than fourteen and a half feet at the furthest; the butt soild, for you need weight there to balance the instrument, and your spare tips will be carried more safely in the handle of your landing net."

Evidentity some fly fishermen in those days used hollow butts with one or more spare tips rattling around inside.

"I use, in fishing streams, a light handle about four and a half feet long with a small net attached, which is more easily carried under the left arm and answers every purpose.

A rod in three pieces is preferred at "A rod in thre Offices, 9 Broadway - New York about four and a half feet iong with a smail not attached, which is more easily carried under the left arm and answers every purpose.

"A rod in three pieces is preferred at the stream, but inconvenient to carry and, if well made, four will not interfere materially with its excellence; i. a. the but of ash, the first joint of hickory, the second of lancewood and the tip of East India bamboo or, as I like better, the extreme of the tip of whalebone well spliced on the tip of whalebone well spliced on "The rod should be sensibly elastic down to the hand.

"The proper elasticity is when a quarter of an ounce weight attached to the tip causes it to descend free feet below the horizontal line of a rod fourteen feet long. The entire weight of the rod should not exceed a pound."

With seven-eighths of the rod gone in seventy years its total disappearance should be complete by 1930, and then they li all have to sah in the sea. Never mind, the surf rod, grewing more powerful as time flies and the sea is a big place.

Jersey and Adirondack Pickerel.

Several years ago I have a recollection of a contributor who called himself "Sasarafras," who had a peculiar style of writing that very much appended to me. Should be still be in the land of the living could he still be in the land of the living could he mot be induced to give us some more of his pleasant experiences? I remember well one of his articles that told of a trip for pickerel on a river in the Adirondacks, the name of which I have forgotten. Perhaps he would be interested to know that a friend of mine during the month of July (a had month for pickerel) in a stream in the Adirondacks caught among a catch of thirty-four pickerel in one day two that weighed 5½ and 5% pounds aplece. They were all caught on a silver spoon used trolling. I have heard lately of a pickerel that was caught from the shore in Swattswood lake in New Jorsey that weighed 7% pounds.
